From Personality to Virtue Mar 16 2022 The idea that people have persisting character traits that explain their behavior is woven throughout the fabric of our culture. These philosophical essays clarify this idea of character, analyze its relation with the findings of experimental psychology, and draw out the implications of this for education and criminal punishment. They bring together a range of issues in contemporary philosophy, including the nature of agency, the modeling of behavioral cognition, the ethical implications of personal necessity, moral responsibility for implicit bias, the prospects for character education and the nature of rightful criminal punishment. The essays emphasize that character is inherently dynamic, and emphasize the close integration of character with the individual's social context--

Which Characteristics or Experiences Influence Interpersonal Trust? Comments and Criticism of the Paper "Who trusts others" by Alesina and La Ferrara Feb 27 2023 Seminar paper from the year 2015 in the subject Economics - Statistics and Methods, grade: 1,2, University of Marburg, course: Empirical Institutional Economics, language: English, abstract: In the following I will present the paper "Who trusts others?" from the authors Alberto Alesina and Eliana La Ferrara. Afterwards I will comment on the paper, criticise some points of it and finally I will give proposals for further research. The structure of this term-paper is as follows: At first I will give a general introduction into the theoretical basics of this paper. This part will explain why it is important to analyse interpersonal trust and it will contain information about the main research hypothesis of the two authors. The second part is about the data and descriptive statistics of the reference paper. This section will contain information about the most important variables used for the regressions of the paper "Who trusts others?" and it will present the first conclusions about the data. The third segment of this paper will expose the econometric evidence. Here I will give a summary about every table used in the reference paper and explain the most important findings of the regressions. After that there will follow a very short segment where I will summarise the main results of the reference paper. In the last part I will give a comment about the reference paper and will add some criticism. This section will end with proposals for further research based on the current economic perspectives. The paper will end with a short summary of my comments and research proposals.

Discussion Paper on the Nature and the Constitution of Trusts Oct 11 2021 This discussion paper focuses on the juridical nature and constitution of trusts in Scottish law. It follows on from a previous document (Discussion paper 129, ISBN 010888175X, published in December 2005) on the variation and termination of trusts, and it will be followed by other discussion papers on related issues in trust law. The reforms proposed in this paper are largely conceptual and theoretical changes designed to clarify and modernise the current law, rather than to alter the substantive effect or practice of existing trust law. Topics covered include: the formation of a trust, rights and duties of trustees and beneficiaries, the dual patrimony theory, the declaration of a trust including standard inter vivos, mortis causa and trustee-as-trustee trusts, transfer of ownership, revocation of trusts; registration of trusts, and latent trusts of moveable and heritable property.

Discussion Paper on Supplementary and Miscellaneous Issues Relating to Trust Law Jan 14 2022 This Discussion Paper is divided into three Parts and looks at the following areas. Part 1 - raises the possibility of enacting a comprehensive statement of trust law in Scotland; Part 2 - re-considers on a number of matters considered in the earlier discussion papers in the trusts project and in Part 3, The Commission considers five other new matters which have not previously been covered in the trusts project but where they think that legislation may be desirable. The trust is a very versatile legal institution, and in the modern legal and financial world it can fulfil many different functions, especially in the investment and commercial fields. Consequently it is important the law of trusts should be accessible to a wide range of users and their advisers. Jurisdictions that wish to attract international financial and investment business have in recent years reformed their trust law in a major fashion, To bring it into line with modern requirements. The basic statute regulating trusts in Scotland is the Trusts (Scotland) Act 1921. That Act is now 90 years old, and it looks very dated in both style and substance. Much of it is redolent of an age when trusts were used to hold landed estates or, through the marriage contract trust, To deal with weaknesses in the law relating To The property of married women. Today, while trusts of that nature can be encountered, it is much more common to find trusts used For The purposes of tax and estate planning or to regulate a family's business interests or for commercial purposes. The use of trusts for commercial purposes can take many forms, including investment vehicles, pension trusts, securitisation trusts and many others. Those changes have not been reflected in Scottish trusts legislation and this discussion paper therefore sets out options to improve and update this legislation.

Adolescent Development of Trust. CIRCLE Working Paper 61 Feb 15 2022 The purpose of this project was to gain a better understanding of dimensions of trust and inter-relationships between those dimensions during the adolescent years. Drawing from survey data collected at the beginning and end of a semester in eighty middle- and high-school social studies classes, relationships were assessed between: social trust, trust in elected officials, trust in the responsiveness of government to ordinary people, trust in the American promise, and trustworthiness of the media. The study was designed as a randomized evaluation of a civics curriculum called Student Voices in the Campaign, with data gathered from two waves of surveys with 1,670 students ages 12-19 during the fall of 2004. Students from ethnic minority backgrounds were less likely than their ethnic majority peers to trust elected officials or people in general or to believe that the government was interested in ordinary people. However, ethnic minority students were not less likely to believe in the general tenets of that all people, regardless of background, had an equal opportunity to succeed in America. Controlling for social class, age, and ethnicity, adolescents' trust in the American promise and their civic commitments were found to be significantly predicted by the youths' proximate experiences of social inclusion in their communities and, particularly for ethnic minority students) by their reports that teachers practiced a democratic ethos at school. (Contains 9 tables.).

Building Trust Oct 19 2019 In business, politics, marriage, indeed in any significant relationship, trust is the essential precondition upon which all real success depends. But what, precisely, is trust? How can it be achieved and sustained? And, most importantly, how can it be regained once it has been broken? In Building Trust, Robert C. Solomon and Fernando Flores offer compelling answers to these questions. They argue that trust is not something that simply exists from the beginning, something we can assume or take for granted; that it is not a static quality or "social glue." Instead, they assert that trust is an emotional skill, an active and dynamic part of our lives that we build and sustain with our promises and commitments, our emotions and integrity. In looking closely at the effects of mistrust, such as insidious office politics that can sabotage a company's efficiency, Solomon and Flores demonstrate how to move from naive trust that is easily shattered to an authentic trust that is sophisticated, reflective, and possible to renew. As the global economy makes us more and more reliant on "strangers," and as our political and personal interactions become more complex, Building Trust offers invaluable insight into a vital aspect of human relationships.

The Decision to Trust Sep 22 2022 A proven model to create high-performing, high-trust organizations Globally, there has been a decline in trust over the past few decades, and only a third of Americans believe they can trust the government, big business, and large institutions. In The Decision to Trust, Robert Hurley explains how this new culture of cynicism and distrust creates many problems, and why it is almost impossible to manage an organization well if its people do not trust one another. High-performing, world-class companies are almost always high-trust environments. Without this elusive, important ingredient, companies cannot attract or retain top talent. In this book, Hurley reveals a new model to measure and repair trust with colleagues managers and employees. Outlines a proven Decision to Trust Model (DTM) of ten factors that establish whether or not one party will trust the other Filled with original examples from Daimler, PriceWaterhouse Coopers, Goldman Sachs, Microsoft, QuikTrip, General Electric, Procter and Gamble, AzKoNobel, Johnson and Johnson, Whole Foods, and Zappos Reveals how leaders in Asia, Europe, and North America have used the DTM to build high-trust organizations Covering trust building in teams, across functions, within organizations and across national cultures, The Decision to Trust shows how any organization can improve trust and the bottom line.

Trust and Trustworthiness May 18 2022 What does it mean to "trust?" What makes us feel secure enough to place our confidence—even at times our welfare—in the hands of other people? Is it possible to "trust" an institution? What exactly do people mean when they claim to "distrust" their governments? As difficult as it may be to define, trust is essential to the formation and maintenance of a civil society. In Trust and Trustworthiness political scientist Russell Hardin addresses the standard theories of trust and articulates his own new and compelling idea: that much of what we call trust can be best described as "encapsulated interest." Research into the roles of trust in our society has offered a broad range of often conflicting theories. Some theorists maintain that trust is a social virtue that cannot be reduced to strategic self-interest; others claim that trusting another person is ultimately a rational calculation based on information about that person and his or her incentives and motivations. Hardin argues that we place our trust in persons whom we believe to have strong reasons to act in our best interests. He claims that we are correct when we assume that the main incentive of those whom we trust is to maintain a relationship with us—whether it be for reasons of economic benefit or for love and friendship. Hardin articulates his theory using examples from a broad array of personal and social relationships, paying particular attention to explanations of the development of trusting relationships. He also examines trustworthiness and seeks to understand why people may behave in ways that violate their own self-interest in order to honor commitments they have made to others. The book also draws important distinctions between vernacular uses of "trust" and "trustworthiness," contrasting, for example, the type of trust (or distrust) we place in individuals with the trust we place in institutions. Trust and Trustworthiness represents the culmination of important new research into the roles of trust in our society; it offers a challenging new voice in the current discourse about the origins of cooperative behavior and its consequences for social and civic life.
